FOR  BASS RECORDER

C.P.E. Bach   Trio Sonata in F Major   Trio Sonata in F Major  (H588/Wq.163)

Transcribed for Two Bass Recorders & Spinet/Harpsichord

25

Rosebay Recorder Archive
for Basset Recorder
Arranged by P J Perry

Trio Sonata in F Major

C.P.E. Bach

Transcribed for Two Bass Recorders
(Viola & Bass Recorder)

Rosebay Recorder Archive - Part 25

Rosebay Recorder Archive - Part 25

Rosebay Recorder Archive - Part 25

Rosebay Recorder Archive - Part 25

Rosebay Recorder Archive - Part 25

Rosebay Recorder Archive - Part 25

Rosebay Recorder Archive - Part 25

III

Rosebay Recorder Archive - Part 25

Rosebay Recorder Archive - Part 25

Rosebay Recorder Archive - Part 25

Rosebay Recorder Archive - Part 25

Transcription Notes
I had known of the existence of this piece for forty years - probably the only composition for bass recorder written by a significant composer between the 17th and 20th centuries - but only now, via imslp.org, have I seen the score. Though written for viola and bass recorder, I was surprised to see that the viola part had the exact range of a modern bass recorder, while the original bass recorder part covers just the bottom twelfth. Thus it has been possible to transcribe the sonata for bass recorder duo without altering a note. However, it makes sense to mould the interpretation to suit both instrument and technique, therefore some freedom may be taken in phrasing, slurring and ornamentation. For example, in the second movement, bars 4 and 81, note values [dA.] are suggested (as used in bar 12) which follow the keyboard harmony.
The continuo realisation is intentionally minimal in order to aid the dynamic balance. Closing the lid of the keyboard instrument and omitting a string bass would also help in this regard. Indeed, though strictly a trio sonata, on styalistic grounds a good argument can be made that this piece is as much roccoco-classical as baroque in character.

